DISRAELPS PLAN.

Strange Allience of English Peers and Working men-Torres Getting Between the Liberals and the Wind.

(From the London Daily Telegraph.)

A scheme, such as was shadowed forth by Mr. Deraeli in "Siby," has taken a shape more distinct, though evidently not yet developed to the point of action, in certain reports of a "new departure?" in English pointes. These reports have been vaguely fluting about for some time, and now some lew of our contemporaries are beginning to break the stience on the subject, the most connected account of the matter being given by the Scotsman and the MantenesterGuard.am. It would seem from this statement that early in January an idea of union between the aristocracy and the proletariat sprang up among certain peers, who invited a representative body of workingmen to commit their demands to paper. The negotiator in the early stage of the affair was Mr. Scott Russell, who enjoys the confidence of many artisans, and who addressed himself in the urst instance to Mr. Alian, the Secretary of the contety of Engineers. On learning that a number of conservative members of the upper house had become anxious to be brought into communication with the representative men of the skilled artis in classes throughout the country, for the purpose of outaining something like an authoritative definition and expression of the social and pointical reforms deared by the workmen, "Was this information," asked Mr. Alian, "desired only with the object of concocting measures to render those reiorims altogener impositoie?" An assurance was given, in reply, that the contrary was the case, and that the motive of those noblemen who had asked the question was to discover whether the wis ed-for reiorins could not be brought before Pariament and passed into law. It was further arged upon the notice of Mr. Alian is represented as having asked in twas true that the leaders of the conservative party, or any considerance section, could be willing to promote faulted, social and pointical reforms, or were their professions only a cloak for political designs—part of accented to have been sounded or directly addressed, but when

The Tallways shall be purchased and conducted at the public expense and for the common good, as the Post Office service is now conducted.

On the 4th of August the Peers, who are said to lave been, pending negotiations, kept in ignorance of the names of the workinsmen, as were those of he names of the Peers, signed an agreement, of thich the following is a copy:—

ish of the enlightened public opinion of the country to accure withinsts success.

The signatures to the treaty on the part of the Peers and Commons are:—The Earl of Lichfield, the Fearl of Cannarvon, the Marquis of Salisbury, the Marquis of Lorn, Lord Henry Lennox, Lord John Manners, Sir John Paking on, Si, Stafford North-cote and Mr. Gathorne Hardy. The Duke of Riccinnond, the Earl of Derby and Mr. Disraeli, though they have not affixed their names to the document, are unceratood to have been privy to the negotia tions. The names on the part of the artisans are those of Messis, Robert Applegart, Joiner; baurel Guile, non-founder; George Potter, Joiner; Lawel Guile, non-founder; George Potter, Joiner; Layd Jones, ustan actic; W. Bradhurst, mason; Welstone, engineer; Deighton, Joiner; Barker, shoomaker; Squires, paluter; Barry, autnor of "Workmen's Rights;" Latham, chairman of the Labor Representation League, Engiander, telegraphist, and Scott Russell, engineer.

"The Council of Legislation," as the Peers call themselves, is shortly to be increased by the ad-altion of seven other members, and early in January a meeting of the two councils is to be head, at which the form of the bills to be introduced in Parliament.

THE MACE AND COBURN PRIZE FIGHT.

Joe Coburn in Training.

[From the New Orienns Times, Oct. 22.]

The coming fistic coniest between Jue Coburn and Jem Mace, to take place on November 10, at a point within one hundred miles of New Orienns, is exciting much attention at the hands of all admirers of the many art throughout the country, many regarding the event as one of the most important which has ever taken place, and, as the time draws near, the movements of the men are eagerly we tched and specuation grows rife as to the probable result of the meeting. Twice before have they excepted the meeting. Twice before have their attempts resulted in anything out light. The first matter was made to be fought in Ireand about three years ago; but although Coourn was on hand at the appointed time, Mace failed to put in an appearance, the anteged rause being an interierence by the authorities, Mace forleiting the money already up.

pearance, the stieged cause being an intercerence by the authorities, Mace forieiting the money already up.

The next match was arranged after the arrival of Mace is this country, and was fixed to take place last spring, in canada, but again was the affair proken up, the valuant upstaff men of the Dominion nipping it in the bud, after the men had resched the ground and spent an hour to no purpose in the ring, The present match grew out of a difficulty between the two last summer, upon the occasion of Coburn's yish to Mace's sulcon, the "capitol," and, as Joe says, Mace forced him to accept his challenge, to yindicate himself in the eyes of his irrends, Coburn reached town on aconday last, accompanied by his trainer, Patsey Dwyer, and having immediately selected Dan Hickok's, at Carronton, as his training grounds, he commenced to take his irraning grounds, he commenced to take his irraning grounds, he commenced to take his observable, and having intendence, acc, to be pursued, the system of training which he has followed in preparing for all his ughts being peculiarly his own, and different from that adopted by other prize ring champions.

He gets up each morning at six o'clock and takes a sharp walk of about four mines, returning from which he eats a ugnt breakfast, consisting of a mutton chor, or perhaps a small becisteak, a cep of tea and some wheat break list, consisting of a mutton chor, or perhaps a small becisteak, a cep of tea and some wheat break list, in time going ten or twelve miles, and on his teurn being theoroughly rubbe's down by his trainer.

At one o'clock he takes dinner, his diet at this meal consisting of almost anything he desires, and as his morning's work as of that particular kind which invites a rerocious appetite it is safe to presume that he puts away a "healthy meal" at one? M.

Alter a short rest, a couple of hours are devoted.

which invites a lerotods apartically meal" at one P. M.

After a short rest, a couple of hours are devoted to exercise with indian clubs and on the horizontal bar, the former of which being a favorite with him. At five o'clock he goes in for another four mile walk, and at six he takes a light supper, returng to bed promptly at nine o'clock every night. During the day he exercises in sparring with his trainer, with a view to keep his hand in. He says that although nearly all prize fighters pursue a strict course of diet, he does not, and that he will always eat and drink what he likes. The chief feature in his system, and upon which he dependa, is a regularity of nabits, which is kept up most faithfully. Coourn has telegraphed for Mcintyre, the man who has trained him for all his fights, and says that if he can get him all will be serene, as he thinks him the best trainer in the world.

Hickor's will undoubtedly be a centre of attraction to those who are curious to "interview" one who is tamous as an exponent of the manny art, and all who do call on him will find him a very agreeable bersonage, ready at all times to give a welcome to visitors. Ned O'Baldwin, the irish giant, and to arrive in town in about ten days, for the purpose of being on hand at the mill.
